DECAYED NOBILITY IN GERMANY A "bitter cry" of an unexpected kind comes from Germany. At Potsdam a society. has been formed with the appropriate title of "Nobilitas." Its special function will be to: minister to the wants of the needy members of the German nobility. " Better not to be at all than not be noble" is a phrase that may be found in one of the works of the latest accession to the ranks of the British peerage, but in the technical sense of the word "nobility" may sometimes be an inconvenient grandaur. In Germany we are told many scions of titled houses are suffering severely from that " want of pence which vexes public men." Not even the thrifty and homely fashions of the Fatherland can save them from straits which are at once pathetic and grotesque. It is seriously asserted that those who are entitled to claim feudal honours and the respect which aristocratic tradition regards as the heritage of of cabmen, barbers, coast-guardmen, and become assuciaced with
